

TNJ Institute: Neighborhood Empowerment Models

This workshop will explore Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design and ways to empower community stakeholders throughout the process.

CRIME PREVENTION THROUGH ENVIRONMENTAL DESIGN (CPTED)

is a community problem-solving approach that brings together law enforcement, city planners, residents and local stakeholders to assess a neighborhood's vulnerabilities to crime and collaboratively develop meaningful solutions. Community members can become leaders by self-organizing within a multi-disciplinary team to work ahead of or in tandem with local government rather than waiting for government-led projects.

This workshop will go beyond training participants in crime prevention concepts. It will demonstrate how the CPTED process provides a model for empowering members of the community within a self-guided process for problem identification, development of solutions, and executing physical and social changes in their environments.
